PHILLIPS ACADEMY, ANDOVER, MASS., DECEMBER 16, 1891.

NO. 26

Communications.

Editors of The Phillipian:

As it is the time of the year when everyone is making presents, will not some person make a Xmas gift to the Academy, in the form of a picture of last year's base-ball nine? With this addition the series would be complete, and, unless the vacancy is filled at once, it may become difficult to obtain a picture.

Editors of the Phillipian:

In a school as large as Phillips, there must be a number of men who are interested in chess, and who would be willing to give some time for playing, if a club were organized. Great success has been attained in this line at many of the colleges, especially at Yale, where Andover men are taking a leading part in the movement. Being concerned in the subject, I should like to have some attention drawn to it to ascertain whether enough interest can be aroused to assure the forming of such a club.

Concert.

The concert by the Andover Orchestra on Friday was a thorough success, and deserved a larger audience than was present.

The selections worthy of special mention were, the cornet solo by Mr. E. S. Bailey, P.S. '94, Mr. Johnson's tenor solo, and the vocal duet by Messrs. Johnson and Tyler. The "Darkey's Dream" also was pleasingly rendered, as was Mr. Tyler's bass solo, "Who treads the path of duty." Two P.A. men took part, Mr. E. S. Bailey, P.S. '94, playing the cornet, and Mr. T. N. Nelson, P.A. '95, the cello.

The programme was a very pleasing one, and the Orchestra is so complimented on the talent that was shown.

The programme was as follows:

Overture—"Home Circle." Schelpegrell
The Andover Orchestra
Bass Solo—"Who treads the path of duty." Mozart
Mr. Tyler.
Cornet Solo—"Levy Athan." J. Levy
Mr. Bailey.
Tenor Solo—Ballad, "Thine Only." Mr. Johnson.
Concert Waltz—"Santiago." A. Corbin
The Andover Orchestra.
Saxophone Solo—Selected.
Mr. Kimball.
Duet—"Till we meet again." Bailey
Messrs. Johnson and Tyler.
Characteristic—"Darkey's Dream"
The Andover Orchestra.
Bass Solo—Selected.
Mr. Tyler.
Finale—"King of the road." Rollinson
The Andover Orchestra.

The Gymnasium.

As the gymnasium will be in demand next term, its present condition could be greatly improved during the coming vacation. Very few repairs have been made about it so far this year and none at all to the apparatus which is in a bad condition. Especially so, is the bowling alley, the pulley weights. And some of the bars need attention. Twenty-four of the thirty-nine lockers are taken and eight of these have no keys.

The few fellows who use it regularly would no doubt be greatly pleased if the building could be more evenly heated and ventilated, and a slight outlay in the way of new apparatus would do a great deal of good and be highly appreciated.

Philo's Public Exhibition.

The Philomathean Society, according to custom, will give an exhibition on Thursday evening at 7.45 o'clock in the academy hall. In order to cover expenses, an admission fee of fifteen cents will be charged.

The programme will consist of two parts, a short scene from the Philo senate, and a Mock Faculty Meeting. Many amusing episodes will be represented. The music is to be furnished by the Andover Orchestra.

Mediaeval and Modern Universities.

The statistics of the United States for 1888 gave a record of three hundred and fifty-seven colleges, and show an organized system of public schools forming an unbroken chain of control over the education of the entire nation. Are we content with the intellectual status of the people? To be sure we can boast a long list of scholars and learned men, but are the people educated to perform the duties required of them? The question is, "How shall we reach the masses?" The monastic schools for the education of monks were the only educational institutions for several centuries. Not until the twelfth and thirteenth centuries was there open warfare against monastic instruction. Not until then did the new material for research and the growing tendency for definite organization assert themselves.

These tendencies resulted in the establishment of universities, creating public lectureships, without system, and attracting crowds of all ages and conditions, in an university where law and philosophy, with a small amount of the seven liberal arts, made up the curriculum of studies. The methods employed were of the most abstract character. The memory alone was exercised, and when this faculty threatened to fail, the instructor assisted it by the administration of a little corporal punishment. But remember the position that these universities held in the history of the nation, for they shared the vicissitudes of church and state alike.

The invention of gun-powder and printing, the fall of feudalism, and the re-formation came to awaken modern times and to stir the sleeping universities into life and activity. They only needed this impetus, and the power within them kept them in motion and they have never paused since then.

We have found the great fact of successful education to lie in the personal intercourse of teacher and student. Words are no longer enough, but reason is enfranchised and the whole intellect put into training. Study is not the occupation of monks nor the pastime of idlers, but it is the natural employment during the leisure hours of men in the world of work who seek through its aid to gain new forces with which to meet life's problems.

The times have thoroughly changed. The past has not proved sufficient; the present cries out in need, and the future stands out before us. What shall we do? Since the people will not or cannot go to the universities, the universities must go to the people, and the University Extension movement offers itself as a medium, bringing back the good of the mediaeval universities, and at the same time breaking down the confining walls "of modern colleges."

University education for the whole nation, organized on a basis of itinerant teachers, is to furnish the routine of work. The great principle of university education is the intercourse between teacher and student, which has already been accomplished within college walls. The purpose is, not to do away with colleges and universities, but to extend their good work, their methods, and their spirit to broader limits. She has succeeded and will succeed. The start has already been made in England by the Working-men's College in 1854. Colleges and universities heartily co-operate in the extension movement, and while the English people had to be lead up to the idea, Prof. Moulton assures us that in the United States, the people have leaped forward to meet it. The question of the university of the future is open and the university extension movement is able to answer it. No one need be idle; student and workingman alike are involved and each has his part to play.—Florence Halliday in the University Magazine.

Foot-Ball at Yale.

The excellent record of the foot-ball team for the past season recalls the progress of the game at Yale since it first assumed a definite shape, about fifty years ago. It was in 1840 that class contests between the Sophomores and Freshmen were instituted, and for eighteen years these games constituted an annual event, until in 1858 the city authorities refused the use of the Green any more for a field, and the sport was discontinued. In 1871, however, it was revived, and in the following year the Yale Foot-Ball Association was organized. The first important game was played this year with Columbia, and Yale won by three goals. In 1873 Yale suggested the formation of an Inter-Collegiate Association, and the suggestion was adopted, Yale, Princeton, Columbia and Rutgers becoming members. In 1874 Yale won her first championship, losing but two goals during the season, but in the next year she was defeated by Harvard. The results varied during the following years and a number of changes were made in the rules from time to time. In 1876 the number of men on a side was limited to fifteen, and two years later it was reduced to eleven. It was at this time that the Rugby system was introduced. While these changes in the rules were going on there were others in the membership of the Association. Columbia, Rutgers and Harvard withdrew, and to-day Yale and Princeton are the only members of the original league who remain. Between them the championship honors have been divided since the league was organized and to-day Yale leads with eight victories to Princeton's three.—Yale News.

School Meeting.

A school meeting was held Friday morning to appoint the managers for the base-ball team. On motion of Murphy, a committee consisting of Weyerhaeuser, F. Howard, and Hopkins was elected.

PHILLIPIAN board meetings are held Wednesday and Saturday noons.

Entered as second-class matter at the Andover Post Office.

THE ANDOVER PRESS, PRINTERS

It gives us pleasure to announce the election of J. M. Woolsey, P.A. '94, to the PHILLIPIAN board.

The next number of the PHILLIPIAN will be issued Tuesday noon.

As there was but one or two vacancies on the board, it was considered advisable to have '94 represented at this time. The competition is still open to '93 and the other under-classes, and, as the seniors will resign at the end of next term, there will be several places to fill then. The competition has not been very spirited up to the present, especially, among '93 men, so we urge them to begin with the coming term and make an effort to overtake '94, which now leads them in writing.

The annual public exhibition of Philo takes place to-morrow evening, and we hope that the students will turn out in a body, so as to assure its financial success. Philo seldom, if ever, fails to give an entertainment that repays one for attending, and no efforts have been spared to make the coming one second to none previously given.

Once more the question of organizing a literary monthly has arisen, and some advance has been made in the efforts to have it carried through this time. The question has been discussed more or less during the past five years, but it was always thought best not to undertake such a step.

There are several facts which ought to be considered before any definite action be taken. There seems to be an abundance of literary talent here at present, which would no doubt assure the success of the monthly this year, but such is not always the case. The school life changes a great deal every year, and the amount, as well as the character, of literary ability makes a like change, which would doubtless proportionately affect the character of the monthly. While it is possible that an improvement would be manifest, it is also possible that the tendency would be otherwise, as such has proved to be the case in the past.

The financial part is second to nothing in importance. The magazine cannot succeed unless it has a good financial foundation, and it is a question whether that can be secured without detriment to the already existing publications. If this cannot be done, it would be better to abandon the scheme than to weaken the financial positions of the PHILLIPIAN and Mirror, which just about pay running expenses; and we are sure that the matter of securing sufficient advertisements does not grow easier.

It has been suggested that the Mirror make way for the monthly, and become an annual. We doubt the wisdom of such a step at present. The Mirror fills a large place in the school life here, and its appearance is always looked forward to with a great deal of interest by every student. The very part that the new publication would leave out forms the great attraction of the Mirror, and, if the present editions are compared with those of former years, a very marked improvement is seen. It seems as if Philo is called upon to make concessions to every literary scheme formulated this term, but she will make a mistake if she submits to any plan that will affect the Mirror in any way for the time being.

The students of Brown University have petitioned for a course in music.

YALE AND ANDOVER.

There is a ring of victory in these names. What pleasure the present and past members of these great institutions take in their great victories this fall. It is presumable that the best team won in each game. At all events, to Yale and Andover belong the laurels. Do not forget amid all your rejoicing that Hannon is right after business, and is offering great inducements to the Phillips trade. He has attracted the patronage of the students by attending strictly to business, by giving them a thoroughly made, stylish, and durable garment at a low price, and by treating every customer exactly alike. These are the principles on which he does business.

Treacherous is the Weather.

This is the opportune time to look out for yourself. An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure; so be sure you are warmly clothed. And in making up your mind as to what you want, do not forget that we are making fine clothes at reasonable prices, and that one of those ulsters we are making will more than keep you comfortable. A few more choice patterns are left.

We have also a complete stock of wool and merino underwear and all other goods found in a first class furnishing house. We are going to have a special pantaloon sale. Look out for the bargains which I will show next week.

Casper Whitney says of Hinkey, P. A. '91, in the Harper's Weekly for Dec. 12, "Freshman Hinkey has been one of the year's surprises. No one outside of his preparatory school had ever heard of him before this season, when he appeared on the Yale grounds as a candidate. He played on the scrub side awhile, but soon gave ample evidence to the Yale coaches that he knew too much football for some of the 'Varsity candidates. He was too much for Hallowell at Springfield and that is equal to writing him down as one of the best players."

To the Students.

The improvement in the laundry service has gone into effect. The Broadway Steam Laundry of Lawrence is doing general washing and mending, both in the most finished and satisfactory manner, at the rate of 60 cents a dozen.

It is to be noticed THAT THIS RATE APPLIES REGARDLESS OF THE NUMBER OF PIECES SENT. All general washing should be accompanied by a WHITE list; all starched goods by a BLUE list.

We have made this change at the request of a large number of the students, and trust that it will meet with the approval of all our customers. For further information and upon any cause for complaint please consult our agent.
