The Lawrenceville Almanac.

A little pamphlet has recently been issued at Lawrenceville, called the "Lawrenceville Almanac." It is edited by Mr. Jamison, with the purpose of bringing before the public the achievements of Lawrenceville men in school, in college and in after life. It is bound in red paper and contains twenty-seven pages. Its contents comprise the lists of Founders, Day Orators, School Presidents, Valedictorians, Presidents of the Christian Association, and of the Track Association, Prizemen in Oratory, Debate and Declamation, Captains of the Football and of the Baseball teams, Directors of the Upper House, the House Champions in Baseball and in Football, the scores of the various athletic contests with the Princeton freshmen, with Pennington, and with Andover, and the records in track and field events. In addition to this is the "Gesta Alumnorum," giving the names and deeds of Lawrenceville men who have made themselves prominent after graduation. Then follow some notable dates in the School's history, and the Necrology.

The booklet is gotten up in an attractive form, and fills a long felt need. If it proves a success, subsequent and fuller editions will probably be published.—Ex.

Cornell at Henley.

We are informed that the Cornell Athletic Council will soon meet to decide as to the advisability of sending a crew to England to take part in next season's Henley regatta. For years the question of an international race has come up for discussion here, and at other universities, but without any definite action being taken. One great objection—the difference in time of the rowing season in England and America—will in this case be set aside as the regatta at Henley occurs in July. The shorter course will necessitate training with a view to obtaining greater speed; but fully as much endurance will be required, as two heats determine the winner. While the crews that compete at Henley are not representatives of any particular college, yet they are composed of former members of university eights, and the honor of winning against them would be almost as great as against Cambridge or Oxford. Cornell now occupies an enviable position in rowing among American colleges, and it may be confidently predicted that if she decides to send over a crew it will be one of which all Americans can well be proud.—Yale News.

Latin Commons 0; English Commons 0.

The first championship game of the series was played Wednesday afternoon between Latin and English Commons. It resulted in a tie, both sides failing to score. The interest throughout was keen. The slippery condition of the campus prevented much running around the ends, but Latin Commons made her best gains there. English Commons relied on centre plays for gains.

Latin Commons proved somewhat the stronger of the two by keeping the ball in her opponent's territory most of the time. In the last part of the first half, Latin Commons rushed the ball to within two yards of the goal, but time was called before it could be pushed over. The ball changed hands a number of times in the second half and at no time was either goal in any great danger, yet, when the game ended, Latin Commons had carried it to her opponents' 10-yard line. Holman, Barton, and Morrow played well for English Commons, while Franklin, Wentworth, Glynn, and the end rushers did the work for Latin Commons. Two fifteen-minute halves were played.

Morton St. 0; School St. 0.

Immediately after the game between the Commons Wednesday afternoon, the Morton and School Street teams lined up, and in two fifteen-minute halves neither side scored. Both elevens played a quick game and were very evenly matched, although School Street's backs were somewhat the faster. Except for a long, high punt, made by Schwartz in the first half, neither side made any brilliant plays.

School Street kept the ball in Morton Street's territory most of the first half, but were unable to score, although at one time they succeeded in pushing it within three yards of the goal. In the second half the playing was done mostly in the centre of the field, and the game ended with the ball on School Street's 40-yard line. Schwartz, Schweppe, and Spence played well for Morton Street, while Butterfield, Risley, Barrell, and Burns did the best work for School Street.

Phillips St. 16; Salem St. 0.

Monday afternoon Phillips Street defeated Salem Street in two fifteen-minute halves by the above score. Salem Street was very weak in offensive play. Senn did their best work, while for Phillips Street Maltby made long gains through Strong's holes, and Laing made some telling runs around the ends.

The only touch-down in the first half was made by Laing, who, with fine interference, ran nearly seventy yards down the field. Day kicked the goal. In the second half Salem Street's line was very weak, and allowed their opponents to gain five and ten yards at every play. Maltby and Laing each made a touch-down in this half. Time was called immediately after the last touch-down.

Lecture.

Mrs. Downs gave the first illustrated lecture in her course on English Cathedrals last Friday evening in the November Club House. The subject, "Norman Churches," was well treated, the stereopticon views being especially interesting.

These churches, which are some of the most notable in all England, are scattered over the whole country. They are all built of stone and in what might be called Gothic style. All of them were built at the time of the Norman Conquest, as after 1475 no great works were completed. The cathedrals were placed east and west, and never in any other direction. The nave ran the length of the building and was crossed by the transept.

After these preliminary remarks the speaker showed in detail the most important cathedrals of this period, Winchester being chosen first. Here is the old banqueting hall where, Parliament met for many years, and King Arthur's "round table." At this place Jane Austen and Mrs. Montague were buried. Winchester has the largest mediaeval cathedral of England, it being about 560 feet in length. The stone is of a dark grey color and the structure is covered with a mass of ivy which completely covers the stone. The tower, which is about 130 feet in height, was the first one built in England. Here rest the remains of William Rufus who was killed in the New Forest, also the bones of the Saxon kings. The next cathedral shown was that of Norwich, the second city of the kingdom. After this, the cathedral of Ely was exhibited. This cathedral is remarkable in many respects, the nave being 230 feet long. The last cathedral shown was Durham, on the frontier between England and Scotland. It is 430 feet in length, and built of limestone. The nave of Durham is covered with a stone vaulting, the earliest in England, for the Normans generally confined themselves to a roof of timber. Criminals sought refuge here, and after they had knocked at the gate, could not be taken. The banner of St. Cuthbert, which was always carried before the troops, was kept in this cathedral, but finally was lost. This was one of the richest cathedrals, second only to Canterbury. Beneath this cathedral are the bones of Balde, who wrote the first English prose on record. In the library of the monks are many relics, chief among which is the cross of St. Cuthbert.

A Lawrenceville-Andover Banner.

The foot-ball game on Wednesday between Lawrenceville and Andover is, we hope, the beginning of a series of games between these preparatory schools. They have met in recent years on the base-ball field, and we see no reason why the games should not be made annual events. The view is quite generally held that school teams, or college teams either for that matter, should not be allowed to make extended tours during term time; but if it could be arranged that the nines and elevens should meet on each other's grounds alternately every year, certainly little but good would result. For such games would furnish an objective point to the season's play, would give an added zest to interest in out-door sports, and would widen the horizon of the boys attending these schools by bringing them into direct contact with other first-class schools of which they may have but dim notions. Of course, some might object to the amount of travelling this would require, but as each team would have to make the journey only once a year, this difficulty is not serious. Others would fear that the so-called "hippodrome" features of the great college games would enter, but by playing on the school grounds only this could be avoided. Yet others would point to the Exeter-Andover difficulties, but the pure amateur character of the games could be kept free from all suspicion by the supervision of a joint alumni committee. We suggest for the consideration of the University foot-ball and base-ball managements the advisability of fostering such a series of games by the promise of a suitable banner or cup for the winners.—Princetonian.

ENTERED AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER AT ANDOVER POST-OFFICE.

The Andover Press.

WEDNESDAY, NOV 21, 1894.

We hope that the men of the Senior class fully appreciate their opportunities in regard to obtaining Senior honors for excellence in any branch of study. Besides the simple honor in itself, the names of those successful are printed at the time of graduation. The rank which must be attained is very high, but marks of the Senior year alone are taken into consideration. The honors are awarded by the Faculty after due deliberation on individual work. They are awarded in Latin, Greek, French, German, History, Mathematics, the Natural Sciences and English, and are worthy the best efforts of every man.

We would remind those who are considering what were called "school assemblies" in a recent communication, that the much talked of social life of Andover may be, after all, quite suited to the ends earnest men have in view. The school year is not a year for either the performance of social duties or the pursuit of mere and continued pleasure. It is set apart for distinctly different purposes. A common mistake is the confounding of term and vacation time. It is easy to force that which has its rightful place at another time, into the school year to the detriment of those involved. Contrary to the belief of the writer, the success of the plan is doubtful. We fear an assembly would not only be one-sided but soon cease to be a school affair. Moreover, the expense would be considerable. If the promoters of the scheme see their way clear, they may be successful, but their wisdom is to be doubted.

The article upon a Lawrenceville-Andover banner, which recently appeared in the Princetonian, serves to show how Princeton men regard the newly-met rivals, Lawrenceville and Andover. Evidently they see the wisdom of fostering these contests; surely the suggestions of the Princetonian is a good one.

The reference to the Andover-Exeter trouble brings to mind an article which appeared a few days ago in the Boston Herald, claiming that Exeter was Andover's only hereditary and natural rival. Hereditary rival she may be but no longer natural, except in that the schools are distant but a few miles from each other. The members of this Academy would be most unnatural men if they could forget the uncertain judgment, the perjured oaths, the broken faith which characterized the dealings of the Exeter Academy with this school during several seasons. Exeter has lost the right to be considered the rival of a school which stands for amateur sport. Lawrenceville has taken her place, and her magnanimous and gentlemanly conduct has established her right. The victory gained a week ago was won by fair means, the reception of Andover's representatives could not have been more hearty, the tone of the Lawrenceville School is high. The article mentioned calls for a reply else we should regret to say that the "spirit" of Lawrenceville commends itself so much more than the well-known tone of Phillips Exeter School, that no one doubts Andover's good sense in cementing the good feeling and spirit of rivalry which already exists between the two schools.

The following men report at 6.45 to-night in Room 1 for rehearsal: Grubb, Richardson, Tyler, Spence, Barrel, Smith, Docker, Heywood, Crosby, Davis.
