DEPARTMENT OF ARCHAEOLOGY

Action Taken by the Trustees at a Recent Meeting.

The trustees of Phillips Academy established the Department of Archaeology, at a meeting held in Boston last Thursday, March 21. Several friends of the Academy, whose names are withheld at their request, have provided a foundation sufficient for the erection of a suitable building, an endowment for instruction, research, and publication, together with a large collection of specimens, which is representative of the various fields in which the student of American archaeology may be desirous of studying and investigating. For the present the officers of the department will be Principal Bancroft of the Academy, Professor Warren King Moorhead, lately of the Ohio State University, and Charles Peabody, Ph. D., of Cambridge, Mass. Professor Moorhead will serve as curator and chief executive officer of the department, and Mr. Peabody will act as honorary director.

These are three purposes for the foundation which are as follows:

First, to awaken interest in American Archaeology and kindred subjects, among the students of the academy and others who may be attracted to the department, and to provide instruction in the various subjects; second, to provide opportunity for careful study and advanced work in connection with the large amount of material to be found in the collection, and for publication of the results obtained; third, to provide, in addition, rooms of a cheerful character in the new building, which shall be open to the students of the academy for social purposes, the place becoming thus, in a way, a centre for the students intercourse from day to day.

The actual institution of the new department will take place on Wednesday, May 1.

1900 Class Gift Received.

Dr. Bancroft has just received a large marble faced clock, similar to the one that hangs in chapel, but somewhat smaller. It is the gift of P. A. and P. S. 1900 to the school. The clock is a valuable one, and was manufactured by E. Howard & Co. of Boston. It has not yet been definitely decided where it will be placed but it probably will be hung in one of the class-rooms.

Professor Wheeler's Talk.

Last evening, Professor Arthur Martin Wheeler, Durfee professor of history at Yale University delivered an exceptionally interesting lecture on the Battle of Waterloo in Bartlett Chapel.

Mr. Wheeler began his talk by saying that no battle was ever fought about which there were so many opinions. There were many different opinions, he continued, about the reason for Napoleon's failure at Waterloo. One opinion is that Napoleon was physically unfit to undergo the hardships of a campaign; another, that his subordinates were inefficient; and a third opinion is that his subordinates were treacherous. But Professor Wheeler's own opinion is that Napoleon didn't have enough troops.

He went into the battle with 128,000 men, against Blücher who had 120,000 and against Wellington who had 95,000 men.

Professor Wheeler explained the positions of the three armies before the battle and his talk in substance was as follows:

The Duke of Wellington with his army was encamped at Brussels. His troops were scattered over a large area, and his ally, Blücher, was encamped about forty miles south of the city. Napoleon planned to get in between the two armies and defeat them separately. He calculated that Blücher would follow his line of supplies in retreating, and thus get farther away from the English army.

Napoleon's army was formed into new companies, new battalions and new corps, and many of the officers commanded those particular men for the first time. His chief of staff, Balthier, in whom he placed a great deal of reliance, had just committed suicide, and his position was filled by Marshal Soult, a new man to that office. Blücher, himself, knew very little about strategy, but his chief of staff, Gneisenau, made up for this deficiency in his superior.

At 2.30 p. m. on Friday, June 16th, Napoleon met the Prussian army, A very bloody and hard fought battle ensued, which lasted until 10 at night. The Prussians were defeated but they succeed in making an orderly retreat. Marshal Grouchy followed them up. He reported that a small portion of the enemy had gone north but most of them had continued east.

The Emperor then followed up his advantage by marching north to meet Wellington. At 1.30 p. m. on Saturday, Napoleon gave the order to attack, as he was sweeping the field with his glass, he saw in the distance the advance guard of the Russian army which had diverted its course and come to the aid of the English, meanwhile the French Infantry attacked in a body. The English arose from the crest of the hill and fired a volley at 40 paces distance. The French were staggered for the moment and the English cavalry charged but followed them too far and were cut to pieces by the French cavalry and artillery. A furious cannonade was begun by the French. The English took refuge behind a slight hill and one of the French marshals thinking they were retreating, ordered a cavalry charge before Napoleon could stop it. The English formed in squares and repulsed them three times. The rest of the French cavalry came to their assistance, and the whole force was destroyed by Wellington. Blücher attacked Napoleon but was driven back. Napoleon decided upon a desperate chance. Forming his crippled army into line he charged the English forces. Although they made a stubborn fight they were out-numbered, three to one and forced to give way. Napoleon made an effort to fall back in order, but the combined forces of the enemy pressed him too hard and his army broke and fled, and the doom of the French Empire was sealed.

Professor Wheeler closed his address by reading a short extract from Wellington's report of the battle, and by making a few comments on it.

THE ANDOVER PRESS

Saturday, March 23, 1901

We wish to congratulate the newly elected officers of Philo and Forum for the honor they have gained and also to congratulate the societies on their wise choices. Much depends on these new officers as to how the societies will succeed and we feel sure that this next term they will do their duty well and will make their terms of office very successful.

The Phillipian takes great pleasure in publishing the particulars of the new archaeological department which has just been founded. This will add greatly to the value of the school work and will form a study which may be taken up by a great many students. It will also bring more attention to the academy from the outside world and will make it better known throughout the country. One of the most pleasing parts of this new department is the fact that rooms are to be put aside in order to increase the social life of the students. This is a much needed thing and now that it has been accomplished our most hearty thanks are due the donors.

Exeter Notes

Mr. Leacock, instructor in Greek has been elected Professor of Greek, to date from next September.

The dinner of the Cornell club has been postponed until next term, and three men have been appointed as an arrangement committee.

A concert by the Mandolin and Glee clubs has been arranged for next Wednesday at Newburyport. After the concert there will be a reception and dance.

The Rev. Peter MacQueen, M.A., delivered a very interesting lecture on "Boer and Britain in South Africa" last Wednesday in the Academy chapel. The talk was illustrated with over a hundred stereopticon views taken by the speaker.

Action has been taken by the Exeter Golf club to prohibit the students of Phillips Exeter the use of the golf links. This has been done because so many students have unfairly used the links. Unless some arrangements can be made by which the academy may use the links, the projected match with Andover cannot be played.

At a trustees meeting held in Exeter last week it was decided to build an addition to the Lawrence House, one of the dormitories. The addition will be built of wood and will extend almost 82 feet to the rear of the present building and will be large enough to accommodate 28 students. In all probability it will be used for younger students only.

The class of 1902 defeated the 1903 team in the bowling contest last Saturday. This victory places 1902 third in the race for the cup.

The standing of the bowling teams at present is:

	Games Won	Games Lost	Per Cent
1903,	19	5	.791
1901,	10	11	.476
1902,	9	15	.375
1904,	7	14	.333

Inquiry.

A business meeting of Inquiry was held Wednesday evening. The meeting opened with Pres. Beals presiding. Crippen first gave a prayer, after which Sec'y Gallyon read the minutes of the last meeting. The business of the evening was then introduced, which was the question of sending delegates to the Y. M. C. A. convention to be held in Princeton, April 4 to 7. Bishop, Crippen, Fernald, Gallyon, Richardson and Cooke spoke on the question. It was decided to set aside $10 for the purpose of sending J. J. Crippen and E. E. Beals as delegates. The meeting then adjourned.
