Pieces of Wisdom From Students

Expand Your Circle

One piece of advice that I would give to incoming students would be to stay engaged. Don't limit yourself to interacting with just the other people in your hall or from your town. Andover is a place where interaction with the other amazing people that have amazing minds is key to your success and well-being. Walk with your lab partner to Commons after class. Go to their orchestra concert. Go to a club meeting that's run by your Prefect or your Day Student Mentor.

Get dinner with your teammates after practice. Most importantly though - don't be afraid. You're all in the same boat. You're all new to this amazing place that you now call home. Nobody's going to judge you. Don't shy away from the amazing people and the occasionally awkward hellos. You won't remember that one bad lunch even by the time finals week comes around - you'll remember the people you find forever. Trust me, they are what makes Andover amazing.

Reach Out to Trusted Adults

VALENCIA ZHANG

One of the things I wish someone told me before coming to Andover is that being able to ask teachers for academic or emotional support is a strength and not a weakness. This might sound very obvious, but in middle school, I struggled a lot with talking to my teachers and asking questions because I felt like I would look vulnerable. But then, when I came to Andover, the difficulty and intensity of the courses coupled with the new environment gave me no room to be confused or keep my questions to myself. I had no other option but to reach out to my teachers and express how I was feeling, and I am so grateful that I did. I was met with so much support and my grades began improving. Also, I felt much happier knowing that I had communicated with my teachers and that they understood me completely. So, don't be afraid to reach out to your teachers for help, whether it's for a homework problem or for a tough patch.

Andover Becomes Home

My advice for incoming students is to be yourself and take this opportunity to make lots of friends. You will meet a lot of new people at Andover whether it's through classes, athletics, or even in commons.

Specifically incoming freshmen, take this year to get to know one another and build relationships that could last your entire Andover career or longer. Coming from a day students' point of view, you are not obliged to go home right after athletics, you can stay on campus and get some work done or hang out with some of your friends. There is always something fun to do on Saturdays and Sundays so don't feel pressured into not coming to campus on the weekends too. I always find that getting work done is a lot easier on campus than at home. A lot of people will say this, but Andover truly becomes your second home.

Take Advantage of Andover's Opportunities

PRISHA SHIVANI

J. CARMONA/THE PHILLIPIAN

If I were to redo my freshman year, the two main pieces of advice I would give myself are one, make use of all of the opportunities that Andover will provide you with, and two, get out of my comfort zone. Andover is a place that has activities, clubs, and events I wouldn't even dream of before. I found myself attending club meetings, sports games, and shows that gave me a chance to connect with new people and try something different. So, when the club fair or The Weekender comes out, keep an open mind to all the possibilities. Two is to get out of your comfort zone, which coincides with my first piece of advice. Trying new things may be uncomfortable at first, but it is important for personal growth. As an introvert, something that was out of my comfort zone was speaking up more in classes, clubs, and meetings, and I was able to slightly overcome that step by step. Overall, I would say have fun and do not worry too much about the outcome!

Try Something New

You will hear everyone say this but please take my word for it when I say try something new. For me, Andover was a new start, a place where I began Japanese from scratch and graduated with an independent project and the ability to watch anime without subtitles, a place where I decided halfway through to go from STEM to liberal arts and successfully head into college pursuing an interdisciplinary career. There are few places in this world as welcoming as Andover towards beginners, so take this time to try out a new sport, language, art, whatever it may be, because it is also one of the few places that will advance your skill by so much in so little time.

Keep an Open Mind

GRACIE AZIABOR

be extremely daunting, especially when it's as rigorous as Andover. That said, I grant you one piece of advice that'll make your experience more fulfilling. I encourage you to enter with an open mind. Before applying to Andover, you probably did extensive research, toured the school once or twice, and came for a revisit day. All of these things may lead you to believe you can predict exactly how your new life at Andover will be. However, I urge you to show up on the first day without a set idea of what you want to do, what classes you'll take or drop, and what kinds of people you meet. After just one year at Andover, I can guarantee you that some things will take you by surprise. You'll become best friends with someone who you never thought you could bond with, find yourself enjoying the classes you thought you hated, or even excel at a sport you've never played before. Andover prides itself on being a space where opportunities are endless, so take advantage of all that you can.

New Blue Key Heads for 2023-2024 Selected

A. CHINN/THE PHILLIPIAN

JACQUELINE GORDON & LUCAS BENARDETE

Crowds of students gathered in the lobby of the Oliver Wendell Holmes Library (OWHL) on April 20, anticipating the traditional arrival of the new Blue Key Heads (BKs). Following a secretive initiation that afternoon, the 2023-2024 BKs — Adaora Mbanefo '24, Spencer Salhanick '24, Sebastian Valasek '24, Cristina Donovan '24, George Stoodly '24, Juliana Reyes '24, Molly MacKinnon '24, Jack Swales '24, Josie O'Rourke '24, and ND Nwaneri '24 — took a celebratory lap through the first floor of the OWHL, announcing the beginning of their tenure in the spirited role.

Mbanefo, one of the newly selected Blue Key Heads, described her goals for the future in her new position. Mbanefo expressed her desire to give back to the Andover community by doing her part to raise campus spirit and morale.

"I just hope to uplift morale on this campus because we are in a place where it's really hard... A lot of people are struggling and just for them to see a couple happy friendly faces around campus. I will always just be there, be cheering them on, and be their biggest supporters," said Mbanefo.

In BKH tradition, each former BKH chooses a "child," or someone to continue their legacy in the next group of BKs. Former BKH Madison Yuan '23 expressed excitement in watching her "child," Mbanefo, and the other BKs take on their new roles.

"We have a very special Class of 2024... [Adaora's] audition absolutely blew me away. She's such a special person. I know that the [new BKs] will go out of their way to not just continue the traditions we have, but develop crazy new things that will make the school a better place," said Yuan.

Similar to Mbanefo, new BKH Reyes explained her motivation to try out for the position. According to Reyes, she was driven by her experience joining the Andover community during the Covid-19 pandemic and her desire to make sure new Andover students have a lively, welcoming introduction to the school.

"I wanted to be a Blue Key Head because I wanted to be part of a very supportive community here at Andover... For example, [my Junior year] was during the pandemic, so I didn't have that screaming welcoming. It was more like, go to your room, isolation, quarantine. And seeing how that made me feel very homesick and lonely. I didn't want that to happen to the newer generation of students," said Reyes.

Following the reveal in the library, former BKs Dagny Bingham '23 and Charles Murphy '23 elaborated on the selection process.

"We look for big personalities that would represent the school well. So people we knew would keep it somewhat PG but also [who can be] total animals... [and] incredibly hype," said Murphy.

Bingham continued, "It's also just trying to remember that you are trying to show the diverse group at this school, so you have to pull from different friend groups, make sure different people are represented."

Murphy believes being a BKH was the "greatest thing" he has done at Andover. Looking forward, Murphy hopes that the new BKs will continue to paint themselves blue before Andover/Exeter, scream at sports games, and revitalize the Big Blue chants.

"I hope it's the precedent we set, like going to girl's lacrosse games in the rain. Being the only fan. Going to JV puck. Just showing up and being the only person in the stands cheering and just knowing that someone is in Andover's corner is the legacy I want to leave," said Murphy.

Campus Buildings Vandalized, Criminal Investigation Ensues

VERA ZHANG

On the morning of May 30, the first day of Finals Week, the Andover community woke up to numerous vandalized buildings, pathways, and other campus property. Graffiti was found on the walls, doors, and windows of Paretsky Commons, Oliver Wendell Holmes Library, Bulfinch Hall, Pearson Hall, the Memorial Bell Tower, and the Armillary Sphere on the Great Lawn.

Messages such as "Wake up!" and "Hate the indoctrination" were written, and an Instagram account was tagged in one of the messages, indicating affiliation with the acts of vandalism. At the time of this article, the individual or group of individuals behind the vandalism had not been discovered.

Around an hour after the first class block, Head of School Dr. Raynard Kington sent a school-wide email detailing the incident of vandalism. He reported that a criminal investigation led by the Andover Police Department is underway.

"A disturbing case of vandalism was discovered early this morning across campus. In addition to defacing the exterior of several campus buildings and monuments with graffiti, the content includes profanity and statements referencing indoctrination, school systems, and government...

In this final week of the school year, it is especially disheartening to encounter such inexcusable acts in our community...Phillips Academy has zero tolerance for criminal acts of any kind and will continue to work with the authorities to determine who is responsible," wrote Kington.

Almost immediately after discovering the words, Andover had contacted the Andover Police Department (APD). By the end of the first class block, the front door of Bulfinch was repainted, and other places were barred off with caution tape. As of the morning of May 31, a pressure-washing company has been hired by the school and is working to remove the remaining graffiti. According to Lieutenant Edward Guy, Executive Officer of the APD, Phillips Academy is now working with the APD and detectives to find the perpetrators.

"The Andover Police Department was notified of several buildings that were vandalized overnight. Andover Police responded along with Andover Police Detectives to investigate the incident. We will be working with the Phillips Academy administration on this investigation. This is an active investigation and the damage to the buildings is significant," wrote Guy in an email to The Phillipian.

In an interview with The Phillipian, Dr. Susan Esty, Dean of Students and Residential Life, also expressed her apprehension regarding the incident. Specifically, Esty is worried about the safety and well-being of the students.

"I understand that whoever did this is trying to send a message or lots of messages, but I hope that students continue to feel safe on campus, especially in our last few days, and I would hope they feel comfortable reaching out to an adult. Dr. Kington's email said we would increase security, but the last thing we would want is people feeling unsafe on campus," said Esty.

Overall, the student outlook on the vandalism and its messages seems negative. Abby Heppelman '23 expressed her dissatisfaction with how the perpetrators decided to express their views, noting the physical damage to the defaced buildings.

While the crime itself was not violent, some students feel threatened or unsafe on campus due to the incident. Graham Hardin '23 commented on the fact that the vandalism had made the school feel more dangerous.

"[Andover] feels a little less secure... now that there are people vandalizing. This is the second case this year. It creates an environment where you are kind of wondering when the next thing is going to happen, you are kind of on edge, and there is a bigger presence. Of course, it is not a violent crime, but it makes you wonder," said Hardin.

"Nor and Ryan Together": New Student Body Co-Presidents Express Excitement For Tenure

JACQUELINE GORDON

Nor DeHoog '24 and Ryan Lam '24 were elected as the Andover Student Body Co-Presidents for the 2023-2024 school year last Friday. The two previously served together as Upper Class Representatives for the Class of 2024.

DeHoog commented on the joy she felt after hearing the news. In particular, DeHoog expressed her excitement to lead weekly Student Council meetings and to uphold the responsibilities of current Student Body Co-Presidents—Nigel Savage '23 and Sui Yu '23.

"We were together when we heard the news, Nigel and Sui gave us a call to deliver the news. Immediately for me [there was an] overwhelming sense of joy. I was ecstatic, over the moon, [it was the] best news that I could have wished for. Given my three years as Class Rep, when we have student council meetings, usually the Co-Presidents sit at the head of the table. I'm excited to see the room from a different perspective and I'm excited to just kind of feel what it's like to be in Nigel and Sui's shoes," said DeHoog.

Sharing DeHoog's sentiment, Lam expressed his eagerness to serve the Andover community, while also acknowledging the difficulties to come.

"There are definitely going to be a lot of challenges, with all of our ideas. Fortunately, we are a pair that is resilient and keeps pounding away and we will keep trying to work as hard as we can with every member of the faculty member, every member of the student body," said Lam.

Savage described his excitement to help the new co-presidential pair transition into their role. In addition, Savage commended the pair on their work throughout the election process.

"I thought that clearly the school resonated with their ideas and I think they have really thought it out. I know they've talked a lot with administrators and faculty, trying to make sure their items had support and had good feedback. All eight pairs were really good people and really strong candidates and the student body chose who they wanted," said Savage.

Savage continued, commenting how he hopes the pair can continue the current efforts to organize a day-on for Earth Day. Instead of holding academic classes, the student body would participate in sustainability and climate programming on Earth Day.

"The biggest thing that I hope that they do [was] one of our big goals this year, trying to do Earth Day-on, and have an academic day off but programming for sustainability and climate. We got really close to being able to do it but it kind of got taken away when we were really close to getting it done. So that's one thing that we're hoping that they're able to complete that we weren't able to finish," said Savage.

During the election process, the pair emphasized the idea of a "Community Committee," a space where clubs, affinity groups, and other organizations can come together to discuss how to further improve community life on campus, alongside networking with administration.

"I'm excited because I think it'll expand our ability to connect with different people in the student body, but I think it's a way for different groups to partner together. At the end of the day, that's what makes a strong community, people who are not only able to work hard together, but also play hard together," said DeHoog.

Salvador Gomez-Colon '21 Returns to Campus for All-School Meeting

LUCAS BENARDETE

Salvador Gómez-Colón '21, the former 2020-2021 Student Body Co-President, is now an internationally recognized humanitarian and climate resilience advocate. During All-School Meeting (ASM) on April 27, Gómez-Colón kicked off Earth Week by talking about his experience with climate fundraising and activism, and our roles in the international community and in protecting our ecology.

Starting off his talk, Gómez-Colón reminisced about his Andover experience with ASMs in the past. He spoke on his motivation for coming back to campus to give his speech, and how he hoped to deliver a meaningful message to students coming from a recent alum like himself.

"Returning to campus to deliver an All-School Meeting address has been on my bucket list since practically the first ASM I attended in fall of 2018, but I was not expecting to do so when I still recognize so many of you... During ASMs, if I felt I had something better to do, whether that be submitting a last-minute discussion post for my English 200 class or maybe rearranging my home screen, I would sit in the back corner over there... After going through that rabbit hole while drafting this speech on how that's not the example I want to set, I realize this ASM is the universes way of challenging me to engage that back corner," said Gómez-Colón during his speech.

Explaining what drove him to climate activism and his work, he continued, "Shrouded in this sorrow, the desolation that plagued Puerto Rico had a purpose, tenuous as it may have seemed. For the people's sake, and the planet's sake, I had to keep going... There was too much work to do, too much ground to cover. I felt that I had to go beyond and grow 'light and hope' into an effort that reached the entire island, and six months later, I had done so."

Gómez-Colón spoke on how Andover had changed throughout its history, referring back to the times where Andover was a predominantly white, male, and socioeconomically privileged.

"Initially, [Youth from Every Quarter] with requisite qualifications meant no students but white, wealthy Anglo-Saxon Protestants. But it did not matter to me that [Samuel Phillips Jr.] never envisioned or imagined someone like me attending this institution. The winds have changed [and] taken hold since the days of old Sam Phil and I felt grateful for my privilege. Basking in it, and recognizing this type of opportunity would be formative, I forged ahead," said Gómez-Colón.

Star Nunez '26, a member of Alianza Latina, the on-campus Latine affinity group, felt particularly inspired by the ASM speech delivered by Gómez-Colón. Nunez expressed how she felt empowered by Gómez-Colón's story, and how it motivated her to potentially explore areas of activism that she was interested in on-campus.

"He really inspired me, especially as a person on this campus who is a part of the POC community, being half-Puerto Rican [myself], it really resonated with me and made me feel more empowered to engage on campus with climate change groups and the environment. His project and dream helped open my perspective on possible future plans that I myself could make and achieve on this campus," said Nunez in an interview with The Phillipian.

HOW TO JOIN THE PHILLIPIAN

The Phillipian is Phillips Academy’s weekly student-run newspaper that has been publishing since 1857. We strive to represent all voices of the student body through journalism, and with a board composed of Editorial, Digital, and Business sections, we have a place for any of your passions and skills. No prior experience necessary! If you have questions or concerns, feel free to email Upper Management at um@phillipian.net.

I want to get involved! I’m interested in...
